

ASK AID TO STOP IRISH IMMIGRATION

Delegates of Irish Agricultural Organization Society Come Here to Seek Help for Farming Work.

Three delegates from the Irish Agricultural Organization Society, an association of patriotic Irishmen for the development of Irish industries, reached New York this week to consult with members of the recently organized Irish Industrial League of America, in which such prominent men as Hugh J. Grant, John D. Cramm, Morgan J. O'Brien, John W. Goff and many others are deeply interested.

The delegates are the Reverend Father T. A. Finlay, Vice-President; the Reverend J. O'Donovan, of the Irish League, and the Reverend J. O'Donovan, secretary, R. A. Anderson. This mission to the United States is to interest the American public in the furtherance of the league's purpose to diminish Irish emigration to the United States, and thereby promote the interests of the American workingman.

Next week a grand mass-meeting at Cooper Union is contemplated, at which the methods and progress of the Agricultural League, which has done more to help the Irish farmer than any other organized movement since the English invasion, will be made clear.

Couldn't Help Them.

Before the formation of the society in 1894 by a small number of patriotic and philanthropic gentlemen, the condition of the agricultural Irishman was so poverty stricken as to preclude any idea of its alleviation, except by the most heroic measures.

The small farmer's only solution of his troubles lay for a long time in emigration to the United States. It was the primary purpose of the Agricultural Organization Society to place a check upon emigration by improving conditions in Ireland. The extraordinary results accomplished by the society in the nine years which have elapsed since its formation were briefly outlined by Father O'Donovan, who has been prominent in the agricultural movement since its inception, to an Evening World reporter.

"We have come to America," said Father O'Donovan, "at the invitation of the Irish Industrial League of America, and we hope to arouse general public interest in our work."

"The agricultural movement should interest American politicians and students of political economy, if only for the undoubted check it has placed upon Irish emigration to the United States. We have to gain the co-operation of philanthropists for broader and more humanitarian reasons.

Is Non-Sectarian.

Our society is non-sectarian and non-political. For that reason, perhaps, it encountered more difficulties at the outset than if it had had affiliations with a distinct party or church.

"At the time of our organization the condition of the Irish farmer was pitiable. The chief Irish industry, butter making, was stagnant. Foreign competition had practically driven it from the English market. The Danes, who had organized all Denmark into co-operative creameries for the purchase of improved machinery, had acquired almost a monopoly. Irish eggs had a good name in the London market, but owing to the lack of cheap transportation facilities they had been supplanted by Russian eggs shipped to Irish ports and reshipped to London masquerading as the Irish product.

"The Irish farmer, besides being hopelessly poor, was unable to borrow money except at ruinous rates. With the incidental expenses of securing land and paying their expenses into town four times a year, as well as for the day's labor they lost by the journey, he gave at least 30 per cent. interest for a loan of twenty-five pounds. It was, of course, impossible for him to make money. He got yearly deeper into debt.

Opened a Creamery.

"Our first society was established in Shanganagh, Limerick, where we opened a co-operative creamery for the farmers, who were thus able to reap the benefits of the latest machinery, which they were too poor to purchase singly. Its success was so immediate that other societies were rapidly formed. Until we now possess a membership of 80,000 heads of families, or reckoning the families at an average of five persons, 400,000 members. Butcher formerly sold at eight pence has through our efforts risen to eleven pence farthing a pound, whereas by improved methods which we have introduced it takes two and a fourth gallons of milk instead of three gallons to make a pound. We sold this year $10,000,000 worth of butter, which meant a profit of over $3,000,000 to the farmers.

"Wherever our societies are most active emigration to the United States has practically ceased. We have revived the lace industry too, many women now add over $5 a week to the family income by lacemaking in their leisure hours.

"Many Americans have become interested in the movement from actual observation of its benefits to the Irish people. The Irish Industrial League of America was organized by American gentlemen who were thus interested in it, and we have with their help to extend its usefulness."

WALKED INTO THE RIVER.

Belated Jersey City Man Who Followed Wrong Way Was Rescued. Victor Martinson, fifty years old, of No. 8 Hudson street, Jersey City, took the wrong direction in going home early to-day and walked into the river at the foot of Morris street. Owen Markin, of the same address, who had been looking for Martinson, saw him plunge into the water. Markin threw him one end of a rope, and with the assistance of a policeman got him out of the river. Martinson was taken to St. Vincent's hospital and a charge of disorderly conduct was made against him at the Gregory street police station.

ABEEL SAID TO BE HIDING IN JERSEY

Man Answering His Description
Fled from McIntosh House, in East Long Branch, and Escaped in Carriage.

James Abeel, who as "J. Ogden Goebel, Jr." won the affections of Miss Eleanor Anderson, and since his exposure has been hiding from the police and private detectives employed by the Goebel family to prosecute him, is in New Jersey. Until Wednesday he is said to have been in the house of the McIntoshes, relatives of the Andersons, at East Long Branch. That he was in the house cannot be stated positively, but since his flight from New York there has been a strange man there, and admittance to all persons has been refused.

"The McIntosh house has been closely watched by detectives from Mooney & Boland's agency. Only occasional glimpses of the man could be had until Wednesday night, when a man walked from the house. He answered the description of Abeel in every detail. When he saw that he was followed, and some one called out, "Abeel! Abeel! Abeel!" he began running. He jumped into a carriage that stood waiting, evidently for him and was driven hurriedly to Belmar, where all track of him was again lost.

Supt. Wagonfeur, of Mooney & Boland's Agency, said to-day there was little doubt in his mind that Abeel was in New Jersey.

William Anderson, father of Eleanor, said to-day that the story that his daughter had been in the McIntosh house was untrue.

"She has not been in Long Branch for eight days," said the father. "She is now with friends in New York."
